

A typical week at university...

The following first year university timetable and accompanying notes were written by a current student studying Accounting and Business at the University of Edinburgh. They are intended to provide school pupils with a realistic picture of what a typical week at university is like for a first year student studying this subject at this university. It's worth remembering that every university student will have a different first year timetable depending on their degree subject, university and student lifestyle.

- You would have set lecture times that cannot be changed for the three courses you do in your first semester and second.
- Tutorials can be changed however, as for me I needed to travel home every day on the train, it made sense for me to ask for better/more convenient timings.
- From tutorials you would possibly get a group project, which goes towards your grade, where you would need to spend some time working with that group.
- I found that I just didn't have anything on my timetable on the Wednesdays or sometimes Fridays, so I pretty much had two days off, where I'd catch up on tutorial work and group work.
- I played in the business school football team, so I'd have a long day on the Thursday working and then went onto play some football, but I could manage it well, as I found others that were in the same situation as me.
- For time outside of lectures and tutorials I would go work in the library or get some food and wait until I had something else to go to.
